There is a settlement with Interline Brands Inc. (“Interline”) about DuraPro™ toilet connectors with certain types of plastic coupling nuts that could fail and cause water damage. Interline denies that it has done anything wrong.

The settlement covers the purchase and possession of a DuraPro™ toilet connector with certain types of plastic coupling nuts and payments for replacement toilet connectors or repairs for property damage caused by the failure of the plastic coupling nuts.

Who’s Included? The settlement includes anyone who owns or owned, or leases or leased, a residence or other structure located in the United States containing a DuraPro™ toilet connector with plastic coupling nuts with either a six-ribbed design or bi-wing design, or who otherwise suffer or have suffered property damage from the failure of these plastic coupling nuts on the toilet connector. Images of included toilet connectors are available at www.DuraProToiletConnectorSettlement.com.

What does the Settlement provide? The settlement agreement provides for the payment of $16.5 million into a settlement fund to: (1) pay Class Members for replacement of DuraPro™ toilet connectors and/or property damage due to failure of the coupling nuts; (2) cover notice and settlement administration expenses; (3) pay attorneys’ fees as ordered by the Court of up to one-third of the settlement fund (or $5.5 million), plus up to $500,000 in expenses; and (4) pay a total incentive award of up to $25,000 to the five Class Representatives ($5,000 each).
